THE DANGERS IN TEA DRINKING

The History and Literature of Tea-How it Should be Served-Social Customs in New York.

New York, April 30, 1891.-[Special correspondence of THE HERALD, |-Jonas Hau ney wrote a treatise against tea drinking in Johnson's time, and that vast insatiable and shameless tea drinker took up the cudgels for tea, settling it as a brain inspirer for all time, wrote Rasselas. On the strength of it Cobbett wrote against its usu by the laboring classes, and the Edinburgh Review indorsed his arguments, stating that 'prohibition absolute and uncomprom-Ising of the noxious beverage was the first step toward insuring health and strength words passes on. Europe.

But we have now secured many brands of tea which are sufficiently good, and the famous Indian tea brought in by the great exposition in Paris in 1889 is fast gaining an enviable reputation. It has a perfect bouquet and flavor. Green tea, beloved by our grandmothers and still a favorite with some conneisseurs, has proved to have so much theine, the element of intoxication in tea, that it is forbidden to nervous people. It is this element which makes tea save food by its action in preventing various wastes to the system. It is thus peculiarly acceptable to elderly personate the tired laboring woman. Doubtless Mrs. Gamp's famous tea-pot with which she entertained Betsy Prig contained green. entertained Betsy Prig contained green

More consoling is the legend of the origin of the plant. A drowsy hermit after long wrestling with sleep, cut off his eyelids and cast them on the ground. From them sprang a shrub whose leaves shaped like eyelids and bordered with a fringe of lashes, possessed the power of warding off lashes, possessed the power of warding off sieep. This was in the third century, and the sleep. This was in the third century, and the sleep. This was in the third century, and the sleep. This was in the third century, and the sleep.

Cobbett claimed that the tea table cost more to support than would keep two childmore to support than would keep two child-ren at nurse.

The Querierly Review in an article written perhaps by the most famous chemist of the day said that "tea relieves should always be a lady who, like the hos prently stimulating the stomach when fatigued by divestice exertion and acting as the servant, who, if a woman, should almosphere into the qualities of the paculiar power of tea have tended to raise it is popular esteem, although no one has satisfactorily explained why it has become so universally necessary to the human race. An agreeable little book called "The beverenges we include in. The herbs which we refuse"—or some such title—had a great deal to do with the adoption of tea as a drink for young men who were training for a boat race, or who desired to economize their strength in a mountain climb.

But everyone from the tired washerwoman to the student, the wrestler,

THE FINE LADT AND THE STRONG MAN demands a cup of tea.

To the invalid it is the dearest solace, if it is dangerous. Tannin, the astringent element in tea, is, however, bad for delicate stomachs and seems to ruin appetite. Tea therefore should never be allowed to stand. Hot water poured on the leaves and poured off into a cup can hardly afford the tannin time to get out. Since tea drinkers even put the grounds in a silver ball perforated, and sling this through a cup of boiling.

A PLATE OF RREAD AND BUTTER, or cake, or both, and place it upon the table and then retire, but to remain within call hough out of sight, in case she should be needed. The best rule for making tea is the old fashioned one: "One teaspoonful for each person and one for the pot." The pot should first be rinsed with hot water, enough to cover the leaves poured, which is at the moment boiling. This should stand for five minutes, then fill up the pot with more boiling water and pour it immediately. Some persona prefer lemon in their tea to cream, and it is a good plan to have some thin silces cut for the purpose in a pretty little dish on the tray. A bowl of cracked ice is also a pleasant addition in summer, iced tea being a most refreshing drink in hot weather. Neither plates nor napkins ever appear at this informal and coxy meal.

A PLATE OF READ AND BUTTER, cozy meal.

A guest arriving at this time in the after-water, thus is produced the most delicate cup of tea.

The famous Chinese lyric which is painted on almost all the Chinese tea-pots of the empire, is highly poetical.

"On a slow fire set a tripod, fill it with clear rainwater. Boll it as long as it would be needed to turn fish white and lobsters red. Throw this upon the delicate leaves of choice tea, let it remain as long as the vapor rises in a cloud. At your ease drink the pure liquid which will chase away

The trip the trip the country, in villages and academic towns can be made a most agreeable and ideal entertainment for the official presentation of a daughter or for the means of seeing one's friends. But in the busy winter season of a large city it should not be made the excuse for giving up the evening party or the dinner, lunch or ball. It is should be a refuge for those women who are tired of balls, of over-dressing, dancing, visiting and shopping. It is also very dear to the young who find that convenient tea table a good arena for fiirtatious.

From one or two ladies who stayed at home one day in the week at seven o'clock, and a fin his fencit this refreshment to the many, who grew to find that it was a very easy method of entertaining (the original five o'clock tea, which arose in England, from the fact that indies and gentlemen after hunting required some slight refreshment to meet for a little chat), out of this simple in formal entertainment grew the present party in the day time. It now is used as the method of introducing a daughter, etc., and is the ordinary way of entertaining everyobot.

The primal idea was a good one. People who had no money for grand spreads were enabled to show to their more opidion neighbors that they, too, had
